

It's Time for Smarter Fertility Benefits

The need for fertility benefits is growing, as infertility impacts 1 in 8 couples. People are starting families later when it is harder to have a baby and are pursuing a variety of paths to parenthood.

Despite an increased need, the conventional approach is broken. Restrictive plan designs lead to compromises in care, which result in poor outcomes, increased costs, ineffective treatments, and unintended consequences. And, patients receive little guidance and support through a complex and emotional journey.

Dollars are wasted — hurting employees and costing employers billions in avoidable downstream medical costs.
